DIRECTOR STATEMENT

The movies that I'm drawn to usually have two elements in them; intense dramatic confrontation and direct characters and stories. These are the movies that excited me when I watched them. What excited me more was watching them with my friends and family react to those intense and dramatic scenes that I loved. I love seeing their reaction and as a writer/director, I want to create those same reactions in my movies.

I love the film noir genre because it's direct on who's good and who isn't and as the viewer you always root for the good. Noir movies bring that out of us, from love affairs, money heists, fraud to psychological.

I wanted to have a film that put forth a narrative that represents strong characters that are represented group in law enforcement: women and LGBTQ. Holly took on the lead role and portray herself a determine and strong homicide detective. I believe representation matters, and LGBTQ and women should have roles that empower them.
